1. The National Democratic Russian Government-in-Exile movement in Cuba reportedly has lost the support of Russian exiles because of the inactivity of the group and misuse of funds. The organization has not increased its influence among the Russians in Cuba nor has it counteracted Soviet influence among the Russians.
2. According to source, the main weakness in the movement is the President, A. P. Golovchenko. (██████████ Comment: Wealthy Russians supporting this movement withdrew financial support as it was ascertained that Golovchenko was using the money for his personal use and not for the advancement of the movement.) Paul Longbin, a former Red Army soldier from World War II who has been acting as Golovchenko's secretary, stated that Golovchenko presently is organizing a Russian military academy in Cuba. He will attempt to enroll pupils from all over the world.
